If you really want to get to know someone, have her shuck her shoes to bare her soul.

That's because the toes tell all, from leadership potential to how you handle anger. Even corns say something other than your tendency to wear uncomfortable footwear.

So says Marie Bernat, a full-time spa therapist and part-time toe reader. Bernat, who manages the spa at CopperWynd resort in Paradise Valley, Ariz., reads toes instead of palms when she wants to know someone.

"One man told me after I read his toes that I knew more about him in 15 minutes than friends who had known him years," said Bernat, who has been probing podiatric appendages for five years after discovering the technique while studying reflexology, a homeopathic method in which practitioners apply pressure to spots on the foot that correlate to other parts of the body.

Bernat leaves no toe unturned, noting the bumps, curves, lengths and shapes that determine one's personality.

Janice Lennertz was surprised at the accuracy of a recent 30-minute reading, having no idea her toes would her to be a success-oriented, independent woman with a tendency to become sidetracked.

"There were a few things I didn't realize about myself until she (Bernat) pointed them out," Lennertz said. "A could tell you so much?"

Bernat, for one. Before she met her boyfriend, she would read the toes of prospective partners, often on the man, she said, declined to bare his toes.

But she has declined a date or two based on the tale of those toes. She has met men whose digit placemen
